GW PROFESSOR REWRITES THE BOOK
ON NATIONAL HEALTH CARE

America's health care system must be reformed to give people adequate private health insurance that is not necessarily tied to the workplace, declares leading health economist and health care expert, Warren Greenberg.

Greenberg, professor of health economics and health care sciences at The George Washington University, shares his views in a new book soon to be released by Health Administration Press (Ann Arbor, MI).

The book, Competition, Regulation and Rationing in Health Care, examines how the health care system in the U.S. works. In it Greenberg explores how health care competition can work, explains when explicit rationing may be used and examines market issues that require government regulation.

Chapters cover issues ranging from "Health Insurance and the Uninsured" to health care "Insights from Canada, Great Britain and the Netherlands."

MORE

The book is a must for health care executives, health policy officials, health economists, and students of health policy, business and medicine.

Greenberg has earned an international reputation as an expert on competition and regulation in health care. He has authored numerous books on the economics of health care and he has written, or edited, nine book monographs including Competition in the Health Care Sector: Past, Present and Future; and Response to AIDS: Case Studies of HMO's, Insurers and Employers.

In the Fall of 1989, Greenberg was visiting professor at Ben Gurion University in Israel. He continues his research on the Israeli and Dutch health care systems.
